WELCOME

Welcome to Green Sky Thinking 2018, the programme that speaks to everyone in the built environment.

Returning this year from the 10th to 18th May with 25 events, a fringe programme, launch event and a half-day conference that takes the form of a live magazine.

Our aim? To share honest lessons learned in embedding sustainability, champion collaborative approaches but most importantly feel inspired by actual city-making projects.

We will explore how to make London a city that works for the future by putting people first. After all, Green Sky Thinking itself is about people... you! You are the essence of the programme, who come together and collaborate to make London a great city to live in.

Every one of us contributes to this city in one way or another, consciously or unconsciously; our daily small decisions shape our buildings, our places, the people around us.

After all, we put our hearts into what we care about.

We care about collaboration and building human interactions by creating healthy offices and houses, unique and quirky places.

Active participation is essential and we care about creating the sense of belonging and ownership over our neighbourhoods.

We care about being inclusive and diverse and constantly are mindful of the end-user, the citizen, the employee, the kids, the elderly.

As a collective we care about inspiring others to tackle global warming and strive for sustainability.

We care about change.

What do you care about?

Green sky thinking is a celebration of what built environment has achieved and a showcase of the solutions that work. It's a glimpse of the future implemented into now.

We hope you are fascinated by Green Sky Thinking 2018!
